

School goes techno

STUDENTS at Seven Hills Public School have embraced the technological age.

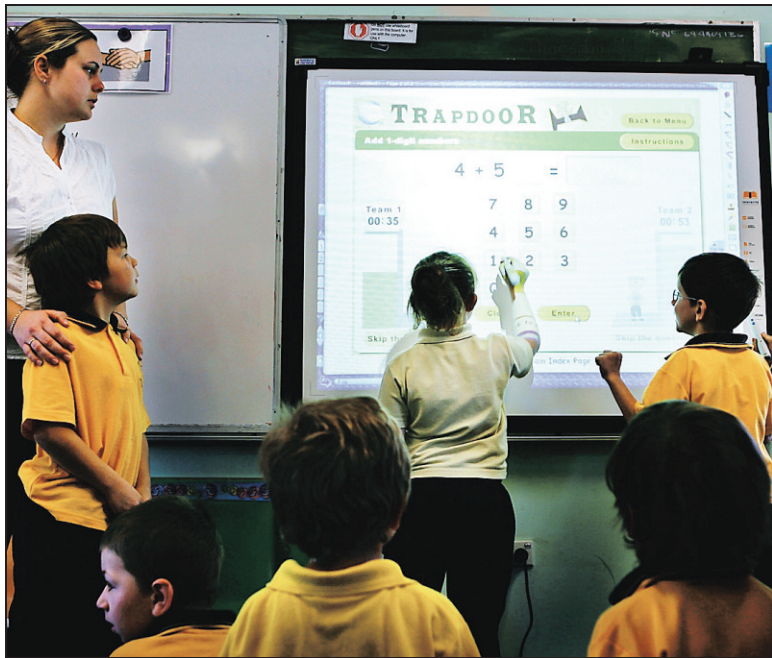

Last week they were more than happy to try out some new educational resources, including the latest electronic whiteboard during the school's open day.

The students were treated to a fun day using a special laptop to manipulate the interactive whiteboards with pictures and words.

Funds to buy the six whiteboards, new computers, printers and books for the library, came from a Federal Government Invest in Our School grant of $103,000.

Maree Rushton, the school administration manager, thanked P&C president Leanne Scott and Greenway MP Louise Markus for helping the school get the resources.

About 100 parents and NSW School Education director Mark Anderson also attended.
